General Information

The silver dragons inhabit the subtropical islands in the southern portion of the Io's Blood chain. As a species, these dragons are kind and helpful. They cheerfully offer assistance to goodly creatures in genuine need.

A hatchling fresh from the egg has blue-gray scales with hints of silver highlights. As it matures, the color slowly changes to gleaming silver. Once it reaches adulthood, a silver dragon's scales have become so fine as to be almost invisible, giving it the appearance of being sculpted from pure metal.

Of all dragonkind, the silver dragons have the closest relationship with their kindred and vassals. They eat the same food, they spend long periods of time in the same form, and often take demihuman mates. This explains the more prominent number of silver half-dragons than any other type.

Silver dragons establish their lairs atop the mountain peaks of Io's Blood's southern isles, which touch the silver-lined clouds hanging perpetually above them. They share these aeries with their vassals, but constantly guard against incursions by their troublesome neighbors, the red dragons.

The silver-scaled dragons are not a violent species. They prefer to avoid combat whenever possible, resorting to actual battle only when confronted by powerful evil or highly aggressive foes. Even so, they will attempt to subdue and repel before they raise claw or gather breath for the kill.

Special and Innate Abilities

Special Abilities: Can communicate with any intelligent creature (16% chance at hatchling, 5% increase at each new age category); spells and magical abilities at 6th level plus combat modifier; immune to cold.

Innate Abilities: Hatchling: polymorph self three times per day, cloud walk (functions continuously but can be negated and resumed at will); Young: feather fall twice per day; Juvenile: wall of fog once per day; Adult: control winds three times per day; Mature Adult: control weather once per day; Old: reverse gravity once per day.

Using cloud walk, a silver dragon can tread on clouds or fog as though on solid ground.

Dragon Tactics and Attacks

Typical Tactics: Silver dragons seek to avoid combat except when faced by highly evil or aggressive foes. They use feather fall to halt missiles fired in their direction, and employ wall of fog or control weather to blind or confuse opponents before engaging in physical attacks. Extremely angry silver dragons with the reverse gravity ability will fling enemies helplessly into the air and snatch them. Against flying opponents, silver dragons prefer to hide in clouds (creating their own if the day is clear), waiting for an advantageous moment to leap out and attack.

Physical Attacks: A silver dragon's claws cause 1d8 damage, plus combat modifier. Its bite causes 5d6 damage, plus combat modifier.

Breath Weapon: A silver dragon has two breath weapons. The first is a cone of cold 80 feet long, 5 feet wide at the dragon's mouth, and 30 feet wide at the end. Opponent attacked by cold can save vs. breath weapon for half damage. The second is a cloud of paralyzation gas 50 feet long, 40 feet wide, and 20 feet high. Opponents attacked by gas must save vs. breath weapon or become paralyzed for one round per age category of the dragon, plus 1d8 rounds.

Base Movement: 9, Fl 30 (C), Jp 3.

Mating

The metallic dragons, of all the dragon families, mate most often for love. They frown upon inbreeding among even distant kin and forbid siblings from mating (a sensible genetic rule some of the wilder chromatics often disregard). Gold, silver, and bronze dragons are nearly always monogamous, often not even taking a new mate after the death of a beloved partner. Some of these metallics will take on an appropriate humanoid form and seek out a mate among their demihuman vassals, with whom they live while they are in polymorphed state. (Interestingly, the strong fidelity inherent to these dragons is ascribed to both dragon and demihuman mates.) When this occurs, male dragons can impregnate female demihumans, thus creating half-dragons. Female dragons, however, can never be impregnated by male demihumans, despite being in humanoid form.

Even among those dragons who willingly engage in a relationship with a demihuman mate, producing half-dragon young is considered socially unacceptable. Although a dragon may truly love his or her demihuman mate, dragon society as a whole finds the idea of creating half-dragons repugnant. Thus, half-dragons are rare, though they do exist. They take physical form of their demihuman parent, but some half-dragons do show unmistakable signs of draconic blood. Half-dragon offspring are considered, at best, outsiders in the societies of both dragons and demihumans in the Io's Blood isles.

Brass dragons, the last metallic type, also make dedicated spouses. They remain partnered to the same mate through most of their lives, though if a loved one dies they often seek out a new partner. Copper dragons, on the other hand, follow a more chaotic path. They spend a portion of their lives switching mates frequently, seeking variety and new experiences every time the wind shifts or the seasons change. Upon reaching the mature adult stage, however, they finally settle on a mate for their remaining years.

Dragons of all types tend to mate with members of their own type. Gold dragons mate with golds, red dragons mate with reds, and so on. Sometimes they will go against their natural tendencies and mate with dragons of other types.

The mixed-appearance crossbreeds, however, are considered abominations. The chromatic dragons tend to kill these hatchlings immediately. Metallic dragons simply banish them from their domains (rumors abound that these crossbreeds are sent to other worlds, but this has yet to be proven). The gem dragons, however, believe that something as majestic as a dragon can never be an abomination. In the rare instances when a gem dragon produces a mixed hatchling, the newborn is allowed to remain a member of the clan.
